Your employees are the ones who make a difference in your company. When it comes to running day-to-day operations, you need employees you can trust to build up your new location in Vietnam. Unfortunately, it’s not always easy to find the time to hire employees in Vietnam while you’re trying to establish a company. During the processes of recruiting and hiring, you’ll need to study up on Vietnamese culture as well as the local laws regarding employment.

Globalization Partners can help with our Vietnam hiring outsourcing services. We’ll find top talent to work for you and make sure you stay compliant throughout the hiring process.

Recruiting in Vietnam

Planning for the practical aspects of staffing and recruiting in Vietnam is just as important as understanding the cultural nuances. No level of preparation for the interview process will ensure a successful recruitment process unless you start by sourcing the right candidates.

In Vietnam, social media is one of the best ways for employers to connect with potential hires. As in many other countries, LinkedIn is a popular platform. You might also focus on establishing a presence on other social media platforms to build a pool of candidates.

Recruiting firms and executive search services are also popular in Vietnam, but many of these options tend to come with steep fees. If you’re interested in pursuing this option, you might be better off partnering with a global PEO that includes recruitment as a part of their platform.

Legal Requirements for Recruiting in Vietnam

It’s essential to make sure your company is compliant with Vietnamese law throughout the process of staffing your international team. In Vietnam, employees are protected against discrimination based on the following characteristics:

- Race
• National and social origin
• Skin color
• Ethnicity
• Age
• Religion
• Beliefs
• Gender
• Family responsibilities
• Pregnancy
• Marital status
• Political views
• Disability
• HIV status
• Participation in a trade union or internal employee organization

As you meet with prospective employees during the recruitment process, you should be sure to avoid any direct inquiries about these characteristics. You should also be mindful of the language you use in your job postings. Don’t mention any specific traits that aren’t true requirements for the position.

How to Hire Employees in Vietnam

It’s essential to focus on Vietnam’s culture when you’re hiring employees. Vietnamese people often participate in small talk, share personal information about their families and hobbies, and ask about their conversation partner’s background. Participating in these tasks are seen as relationship building and can make a difference in someone choosing your company over another.

The concept of “face” is important in Vietnam, and you should make sure you don’t damage anyone’s image, dignity, honor, or status. The Vietnamese often don’t say no, so you should always follow up to make sure you understand the entire negotiation process.

Vietnam Employment Compliance Laws and Regulations
One Vietnam employment compliance law is that you must have a written employment contract for every employee you hire. This contract should spell out compensation, benefits, and termination requirements in the local language. You should also include the salary and any other compensation amounts in Vietnam dong instead of a foreign currency.

The Vietnamese employees you hire should work a maximum of eight hours per day and six days per week. You are legally required to give employees one full day off per week, typically Sundays. Overtime is permitted, but total working time should not exceed 12 hours in a day or 200 hours in a year, with some exceptions for specific industries and sectors.

Onboarding Employees in This Country

Once you hire employees in Vietnam, you need to onboard them to make them familiar with the company, their position, and their coworkers. While Vietnam employment compliance laws do not dictate one way to onboard employees, you can take steps to make these individuals more comfortable.

Try to travel to Vietnam for an employee’s first day or week with your company. You can go over the employment contract together, your company’s code of conduct, and other resources. Onboarding multiple employees at one time can also help establish a sense of camaraderie and simplify the process for your company.

Benefits of Vietnam Hiring Outsourcing

You have a lot to focus on when you’re expanding your company and hiring employees, from understanding how to hire Vietnamese employees to meeting all Vietnam employment compliance laws. If you outsource the hiring process, you won’t have to worry about finding the right talent, but you’ll still be held accountable for compliance.
